Good People Getting Scammed #8

This month our topic is Elder Financial Abuse. Financial abuse of an elder is the illegal or improper use of a senior’s money, property, or assets. It often involves a family member who may try to coerce a senior into making radical changes in their Will or other financial documents. These relatives often seek to increase their inheritance when the elderly person dies.

Examples include:
Cashing a check without a senior's knowledge, or authorization.
Deceiving a senior into signing certain documents.
Outright theft of money or personal property.

Older Americans are particularly vulnerable to financial exploitation because financial decision-making ability can decrease with age. One study found that women are almost twice as likely to be victims of financial abuse.

Most victims are between the ages of 80 and 89, live alone and require support with daily activities. Perpetrators include:

- Family members
- Paid home care workers
- Those with fiduciary responsibilities, such as financial advisors or legal guardians

Victims whose assets were taken by family members are understandably often ashamed or afraid to alert authorities about financial exploitation. Usually they do not want their relatives to be criminally prosecuted.

If you believe you are a victim of financial abuse, resources include:
